Who were the Huguenots?

The name given in the 16th century to the Protestants in France, particularly by their enemies.

The Protestant Reformation in the early 16th Century: its greatest protagonists were the German Martin Luther and the Frenchman Jean Calvin. In France Calvinism penetrated all ranks of society, especially those of the literate craftsmen in the towns and of the nobility.

There were eight civil wars in France between 1562 and 1598 - the Wars of Religion. In 1589 the Protestant Henri de Bourbon, King of Navarre, inherited the French throne and in 1593 converted to Catholicism to try to end civil war. He issued the Edict of Nantes in 1598 which gave the Huguenots widespread religious liberty.

However, under his grandson, Louis XIV, the Huguenots' privileges were gradually eroded. In 1685 Louis revoked the Edict of Nantes, exiled all Protestant pastors but forbade the laity to leave France. However, about 200,000 Huguenots left France, settling in non-Catholic Europe - the Netherlands, Germany, especially Prussia, Switzerland, Scandinavia, and even as far as Russia. The Dutch East India Company sent a few hundred to the Cape to develop the vineyards in southern Africa. About 50,000 came to England, and perhaps about 10,000 moving on to Ireland. So many inhabitants of these islands have Huguenot blood in their veins.

The Huguenot Society of Great Britain and Ireland (created 1885) to promote the publication and spread of knowledge about the history of French Protestant migration.

Is My Family Huguenot?

You may use the Huguenot Library to do your own research. To consult the microfiche index to the Quarto Series or family history material deposited in electronic format, please contact the Librarian for details at: library@huguenotsociety.org.uk

The Huguenot Library is currently housed with UCL Special Collections at The National Archives.

Visiting the Library. The Library is open to readers on Tuesdays and Wednesdays, by appointment only. There is little information in the Library records after 1800 as most of the Huguenot churches had closed by then.

It is essential therefore before making an enquiry to work back to the early nineteenth century using civil registration, parish records or other sources.
